Organic sugarcane farming favors improvement of soil water retention capacity, macro porosity, saturated hydraulic conductivity and total C storage. Organic farming allows input of C in soil via biomass increment above and below ground that can enhance formation of macro pores in soil, which in turn are responsible for the movement of water and air in the soil.